

The immigrants were excited to finally be in America.

Jozef objected to helping with women's work.

Anetka wanted to assure the girls that she would continue to take care of them.

According to custom, they had to wait for the first star of Christmas to appear before they could eat.

Jozef would be deported if anyone found out he had been stealing.

The workers were satisfied with a 2-cent an hour raise.

It was not fair that the Americans could vote, but foreigners could not.

The foreigners tried to persuade the Americans to join the union.

Many workers were hesitant to join the union.

The rickety walls of the shanty couldn't keep out the cold winter winds.

Leon bribed a farmer to let them stay a night in his barn.

The boarders trudged back from the mine and tumbled into their beds.

Although they wanted to see change in the mines, the workers were nervous about the strike.

Anetka packed her most precious belongings in her satchel.

The officer interrogated each of the immigrants.

Anetka bartered with a villager to fix their roof.

The breeze extinguished the tiny flame.

Leon proclaimed he was going to join the union.

The ships were anchored in the harbor.

Anetka couldn't imagine how anyone would want her for a wife since she had no dowry.

Leon was detained at the customs office.

The workers returned from the colliery covered in coal dust.

It was rumored that the culm was like quicksand.

After working for the coal miners many butties became miners themselves.

The second banns of marriage were announced at Sunday Mass.

The flame of the lantern caused the firedamp to explode.